

“I brought order and sanity to Ann’s House of Nuts.”

Ann’s House of Nuts had a problem that was, well, tough to crack.

Despite a recent investment in technology, the specialty snacks retailer located in Jessup, Maryland was still relying on faxes, phone calls and paper invoices to complete its business transactions. This manual intervention resulted in frequent errors such as delayed payments, mis-shipments and lost sales.

Not surprisingly, the lack of integration was driving Ann Smith—owner of Ann’s House of Nuts—nuts. That’s when she called Sterling Commerce.

As a systems integrator for Sterling Commerce, I united the disparate systems within Ann’s company and then integrated them with the systems of her customers, suppliers, partners and marketplaces. The result?

Isolation, interruption and manual intervention have been replaced with collaboration... And Ann’s saving time, money and perhaps, most important of all, her sanity.
